

The Highland Falcon Thief

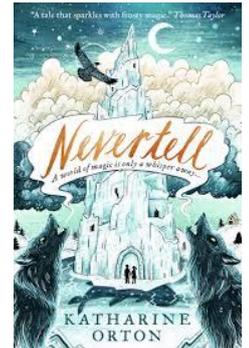

By M.G. Leonard and Sam Sedgeman

This book is about a little boy who gets the chance of a lifetime to accompany his uncle on the last journey of the Highland Falcon. The boy, Harrison Beck, is not excited about this and would rather be at home, but things start getting exciting when a precious jewel goes missing. He has to work together with his new found friend, Lenny to work out who the thief is. I really enjoyed reading this book. It was exciting and adventurous. This would be perfect for anyone who likes mysteries and trains.

Nevertell

By Katherine Orton

I am not entirely sure how to describe this book. It starts in a very scary and realistic setting where a young girl, called Lina, is an inmate inside a prison camp in Russia. She makes a bold escape through the frozen landscapes of Russia, but immediately starts to realise that the world around her isn't as simple as she thought. Her journey is one of magic and sorcery. I really liked the start of this book: the descriptions of the landscape and what happened inside the camp. When the magic began I started to get a bit confused and it was tricky to follow exactly what was happening and there were a lot of different characters that we met along the way. I think this book is probably for older children.

Lights on Cotton Rock

By David Litchfield

I loved this book. It is a picture book about a little girl determined to leave Earth with an alien. The pictures are brilliant and there are often very few words as the author lets the pictures do the story telling. The message of the story is lovely. I can't wait to read this with my two children.
